

Some costume contact lenses have a slit opening to resemble a cat's eye or some other type of custom opening that it makes it very hard for the person to see. Therefore, if one does decide to use faux colored contacts, the pupillary opening in the lenses should be big enough that the user's vision is not compromised.

Whether a mask is strapped to the face or pulled over the head, it should fit the wearer's face properly so as not to constrict the field of vision. If a mask is too loose, the upper part could sag inward and strike a part of the eye and cause an injury. If the mask is too tight, it could
